

A Gift Card for your AutismPro Story

We're always interested in hearing about our users' experiences with AutismPro. Do you have a success story to share? Did you teach a child with autism a new skill? Did you have a revelation, or learn something new?

We want to hear from you!

If you'd like to share your experience, send your story to our support team (support@autismpro.com) with the subject "AutismPro Stories." All submissions will be entered in a draw for one of two gift cards from Amazon to show our thanks. Be sure to include your contact information so we can get in touch with the winners.

ABA in the Classroom

Founder's Corner, by Cynthia Howroyd
M.Sc., SLP (c), Founder, AutismPro

Teachers sometimes ask me, "How do I use ABA (i.e., Applied Behavior Analysis) in the classroom to teach academic subjects?" One approach suggests that a teacher must become familiar with the types of tasks that are suitable for a highly structured lesson, which is the essence of ABA. A teacher must then determine how their learning objectives can be made compatible with these tasks.
